the Pieasures of a Sheepherder's

Life-A Bad Night Out. It was in April, and the weather was stormy, inky-looking clouds were spread-ing across the aiready leaden sky, and a few heavy drops of rain warned me that I must hastily pen my flock of sheep, for it is almost impossible to move them during a heavy rain. I was encamped alone on Juniper creek and; retiring into my 7 by 7 wedge-shaped tent, I closed it tightly, and prepared for a seep. I was very sleeply from being disturbed the night before by the constant barking of my dog as he alternately chased and was chased by a

The place where I was encamped was open with no timber save mesquit trees. Three of these grew at the three corners of my tent, and by the aid of them and other trees I had cut and dragged, I formed a wind break on the east, which was the back of my tent, and on the south side. Having confidence in the wind break thus constructed, I undressed before lying down, that I might rest more than I could if I should, as caution suggested, lie down prepared for the worst. The thunder bellowed, the lightning flashed, and the rain fell in torrents, but about two minutes after my head touched the pillow I was sleeping soundly. I awoke some time in the night, and finding the water running into the tent, I got up to open the ditch with my shovel, and soon went to sleep again. How long I slept I do not know, but I awoke to find the wind had changed from the east to the south, and the rain, driven with great force against the side of the tent, fell through the strained canvass in such quantities that I reached for my oil coat and spread it over me.

She next instant the tent was blown down, and the storm shricked with a mad violence that I never before witnessed. The wind blew in gusts, each gust coming more lively than the last, until I felt the mesquit brush of my wind break pressed between the growing trees bearing down upon me; and as the storm increased in violence, it seemed that I must be swept

The test being wet, it lay flat and smooth with the southwest corner peg still holding. Clutching my bedding and oil coat tightiy, I braced myself firmly, and notwithstanding the great protection the braced myself. ity the wind whipped round to the northwest, and at the same moment I became aware that the water had overflowed my bed, and large hall that would weigh from three to five ounces began to fall, one striking me on the left leg. In great baste I snatched a thin woolen mattress from under the wet test and spread it over me for protection, my oil cost having been torn off me with the first change in the direction of the storm. By this time I had become wet, and the cold north wind chilled the thoroughly.

Formeately the storm abatel, and my clothing being saved to me almost by a miracle, I dressed with wet garments, my teeth chattering. One step brought me to where my large provision box had stood, but it was vacant, the box of pro-visions had been blown away, and but two places of it could be found the next day. The Manufacture of "Stick" Candy. The "stick" candy which seems to be an indigenous American product, is ordinary $^{+}A^{+}$ sugar boiled down with water and a little creata of tartar to prevent crystal-lization. The mass is taken in batches of about fifteen pounds to a marble table where it is kneaded like bread, and the flavoring and coloring worked in. paste then goes to the "pulling hooks, where for five or six minutes it is pulled and twisted. Thence it returns to the marble table, kept hot, on which is worked the candy into its final shape. Stripes are pressed into the batch, two feet long and a foot thick, and it is then drawn and twisted till the proper size of the penny "stick," the right length of which is clipped off by huge scissors.—Chicago

How They Build in Italy. The way they build in Italy is indicated | w. s. bean, by the following passage from a letter from Naples: "I looked down from the balcony of my hotel and watched some masons at work just across the narrow street. They were laying outside walls three feet thick, and walls of two feet between the rooms. The rising structure seemed to be a jail or a bank. I inquired, and found it was designed for an elegant private residence."—Exchange.

A Report on Rallroad Axles. A special committee on railroad axles has reported that iron axles are safer than steel axles; that all cranks should have the webs hooped; that as iron cranks appear to fail after running some 250,000 miles, and steel after 170,000, it is highly desirable that they should be taken oil and not again used on passenger engines; and that crank axies, properly construct ed, are as strong as straight axies.-Chi-
